

SGDI ontology development

VJ Carey stvjc@channing.harvard.edu

1 Introduction

This document describes tasks related to ontology development for the SGDI (software for genomic data integration) project. Principal concerns include

- establishment of conventions for describing designs of and samples from microarray experiments;
- establishment of software tools that help implement these conventions;
- maximizing reuse of programatically accessible vocabulary resources, such as those provided by caCORE/EVS;
- employing appropriate standards for metadata structure design and deployment, such as RDF/OWL models and associated XML serializations.

2 Implementation issues

We will distinguish three basic information structures:

- provenanceStruct: a container for information regarding the source and maintenance of ontology-related information;
- nomenclature: a set of tokens representing terms or concepts, with specified provenance and definitions;
- ontology: a nomenclature with a hierarchical structure reflecting semantic relations among the terms.

2.1 Nomenclature example

An example of a nomenclature structure is given here:

GDI nomenclature:  KEGGPATH
provenance: source = ftp://ftp.genome.ad.jp/pub/kegg/pathways/map_title.tab
              : date = June 30 2004

There are 284 terms.

First 5 terms/definitions

      terms  defs
[1,] "04810" "Regulation of actin cytoskelet.."
[2,] "00520" "Nucleotide sugars metabolism"
[3,] "00521" "Streptomycin biosynthesis"
[4,] "00522" "Biosynthesis of 12-, 14- and 1.."
[5,] "00523" "Polyketide sugar unit biosynth.."

GDI maps:

[1] "LL2KEGGmap.hsa" "LL2KEGGmap.rno"

The information on “GDI maps” pertains to usage of the nomenclature in other information structures. In general it will be important to catalog not only the terms and vocabularies in which they are used, but also the substantive data resources in which these vocabulary resources are deployed. For example, in cross-organism inference, it will be useful to be able to identify which data resources use KEGG identifiers to characterize genomic components or gene products. One can then iterate over only these resources, searching for the presence of a given set of KEGG identifiers.

2.2 Ontology example

An example of an ontology is given here. We use the class taggedHierNomenclature to emphasize

1. the existence of tags, which are abbreviated tokens that are typically semantically opaque, used for abbreviated reference to terms of interest;
2. the existence of hierarchical semantic relationships among terms;
3. the extension of the formal nomenclature class.

The data resource in this example is the NCI Thesaurus, as opposed to the Metathesaurus. The thesaurus is made available to support ontological inference in ways that are not straightforward for the metathesaurus at this time.
